The announcement was made in court that Mrs. Sarah Little and her sister, Mrs. Susan Love have been held to answer for the murder of Charles W. White, in Rochester, on the 20th. Instead of the remainder of the testimony provided at the coroner's inquest, published in the Rochester papers of Wednesday

Then comes the testimony of the seamstress, Mary Ferrel, who swears that Mrs. Little was in her shop at 4 o'clock on Saturday evening, that Mrs. wore a victrola and had a pair of sick roses in her hair and that in overation about the difficulties between her and Mr. Little, the witness remarked that if Mrs. L. would do right, she need not be so much troubled. — The police officers who examined the witness in Monroe street, swear that they found in the house the waist of a lady's dress which had buckled buttons on it, and lots traces of recent washing; that more brass were on a woman's skirt, also found there; that a search in Alusha street, where the parties do-are they fell, showed that no burdock root was but abundance of this weed found on the Riverbank, near which the body of Little was discovered. A single rosette was discovered in the house, concealed in a calico skirt; and in the pocket of the same skirt was a quantity of broken jewelry.

Dr. Montgomery and Avery made a personal examination of Mrs. Little in jail on Sunday, with the following result:

We found an abrasion on the right forearm near its middle on the inner side of the arm; the nose abraded and bruised, and both eyes blackened, and both sides of the right eye discolored and swollen; under the chin abrasions, and a slight bruise on the left side near the top of the chest, below the sternal end of the clavicle. We found on the left leg in front, just above the ankle joint, an abrasion an inch long; left knee, on the outer side above the joint

Similar abrasions and scratches were found upon the person of Ira Stout.

Mr. F. S. Austin testifies that he went to the house of the Stouts, after the discovery of the body, to apprise the family of the event. This was the result of the interview:

"I asked for Mrs. Littles; went in-the middle of the room, and Mrs. Little came in; her face was so marked that I did not recognize her at first; asked if it was Mrs. Little, and she said it was; her hair was disordered, and with one hand she held a shawl round her shoulders; I said 'Mrs. Little, your husband is dead?' She heaved no emotion whatever, and this threw me off my guard; I expected to see her feel rather bad; 'Is he?' she replied, in a tone that made me think it she no news to her, but that she knew about it. Up to this time I had not connected her with the murder, nor heard of her difficulties with her husband. I then asked her if she would not like to go down to the Post Office," he said; "I suppose I'd ought to go down."

A great amount of other testimony was produced; of no particular relevancy. The verdict of the Coroner's Jury was as follows:

The Jury find that the body viewed by them is the body of Chas W. Little and he came to his death in the city of Rochester, on the night of the 19th, or the morning of the 20th of December, 1867, by wounds upon the head from some weapon to the Jury unknown, and by being thrown from the precipice of the Genesee River. And the Jury have probable cause to believe that said wounds and injuries were inflicted by Ira Stout, otherwise called Marion Fry.

out, and that Mrs. Little was accessory thereto, and also some other person to the Jury unknown.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Jury:

Resolved, As the sense of the Coroner's Jury, after a laborous investigation into the death of Charles W. Little, continuing through four days, that there is nothing in the testimony, or in the conduct of the parties, to implicate Eli Stout, and his wife Jane Stout, in murder of said Little, or to subject them to the slightest suspicion of complicity with or knowledge thereof; that they have born themselves throughout the whole of the investigation in a most creditable manner, testifying frankly and fully to all facts within their knowledge without reference to the influence such facts would have upon the members of their own family charged with the horrible crime.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Ju-are due to Coroner Quin, for his energy and diligence manifested in his investigation and his uniform courtesy to the jurors, and the public present; and also to the Chief of Police, Mr. Elliott, and his force, for their prosecution and efforts in obtaining proof and procuring witnesses in this case.

The Coroner then issued his warrant for commitment of Iva Stout and Sarah Little, to await the action of the Grand jury.

“Well, I rather guess it’s—they always have beans on Sunday.”
